11. Academic Profile).

Over the past decade, I have worked together with Dr. Yaffa Moskovich, following changes in three different industrial plants of privatized/renewed kibbutzim. These studies have led to a series of publications, in English and Hebrew, from 2013 to 2017. In the last two years, the focus of my research has shifted to the overall decline of kibbutz industry. Indeed, following an extensive series of mergers and acquisitions, more than 120 plants (out of 350) were removed from the Kibbutz Industry Association list since 2000. I am working on a grounded theory to explain this phenomenon from a kibbutz perspective.

In future studies, I plan to examine the renewal of local communities through the acceptance of young, non-kibbutz populations as full kibbutz members. This new process, that has not been studied to date, contrasts with the absorption of residents in new neighborhoods close to the original localities—a common practice during the past two decades. I am now studying the new development at my own kibbutz and am curious to determine what happens in other kibbutzim as well.

Besides conducting research, I believe that teaching in a peripheral area of Israel is an authentic social mission. More than simply transmitting knowledge, I try to provide students with a positive learning experience than can arouse their thirst for knowledge, as some of my teachers succeeded in doing for me. Whenever one of my students continues studying for an M.A. degree, I consider it a kind of small victory over structural social inequality. This mission becomes more challenging each year.
