10. Academic Profile

The following two books a breakthrough in world war II and Holocaust research. The first "Holocaust vs Whermacht" (2015) integrates two historical disciplines which for years were treated as two parallel narratives. This book examines in a systematic manner the relationship between the German war effort and the "Final Solution" at the strategic and tactical level of warfare during World War II. The Question of the systematic killing of Jews on Germany's war effort has been debated considerably over the last seventy years. Some have argued that so few trains were utilized on any one day that this made very little difference. Others have argued to the contrary that during critical moments in the conflict the ideological priorities of the regime had a substantial effect on combat effectiveness.

The "Final Solution", as we know it was assisted by logistics that were no less ambitious than those used by entire armies. Infrastructure and resources for operational and military needs that were in short supply, were exploited in support of the successful perpetration of the "Final Solution". Given that such logistics did not help Germany's war effort and were a burden on it, the key question is to what extent, if any, implementation of the "Final Solution" affected the operational capabilities and function of the German army during the various campaigns of World War II. The central claim of this book is that Germany's defeat was an operational and organizational failure rather than simply a military misfortune or lack of capability, and that the effort and resources invested in the "Final Solution" were detrimental to the army's combat effort.

The second book which I'm working on "Ganzenmüller (in preparation) The Steam Behind the German War Machine and the Final Solution" has a micro history approach to it through the prism of one particular Nazi functionary. Few people during the Second World War found themselves in a crossroads so crucial for the German conduct of war and for the implementation of Nazi ideology altogether. The position Albert Ganzenmüller filled during WWII was unique and in some ways important almost as the roles of Speer and Himmler for the responsibility they carried for the ongoing Nazi war machine.

The aim of this book therefore is to focus the attention to Ganzenmüller's crucial role in supplying the German apparatus for the perpetration of the "Final Solution". I believe this Nazi figure didn't receive the attention as it should have in historiography and my extensive research on him has filled that gap.

In this respect his role is even more significant than the one of Eichmann's, regardless of the latter's position he justifiably won as the bureaucrat of annihilation. For an unconventional reason Ganzenmüller managed to cheat the Nuremberg Justice system and according to unofficial sources made it to the age of 91 when he died most likely among relatives in 1996 at Munich.

The question is how such a key position as the one possessed by Ganzenmüller, did not attract more attention?, at least as the one given to Alfred Krupp and Albert Speer at the Nuremberg trials - translated to long imprisonment sentences. What was the sort of double play Ganzemuller managed to hold politically and operationally that the others tried at Nuremberg for positions less significant could not? This and more is the center of the research I conducted and am preparing for publication.
